Annette Farry, a self-proclaimed Christian, had planned to have an in-home C-section. However, she sought a hospital-based procedure because it was the only option that came with a doctor on call. Farry said she was taken to Santa Rosa Memorial Hospital in Sonoma County, California, where she delivered a healthy baby girl in December of 2013. Shortly after her daughter was born, she started bleeding heavily from her C-section wound. She says she was ignored by the hospital staff and that she was sent home with a bottle of Tylenol instead of an aspirin or anti-inflammatory to stop the bleeding. She said she woke up in the early morning hours at home, just as she began to feel a sharp cramp in her abdomen. "After a minute I went to the bathroom and it was a baby," she told CBS affiliate KOIN. "I just flipped out and called the hospital. They said they couldn't help me, that I had to drive over here to their emergency room." She said she drove past the
